W. L. Hobart, Editor
J. A. Strader, Managing Editor

On the cover:
A daytime resting pod of age-1 red king crab, each about the size of a 50-cent piece, at Kodiak, Alaska. Each evening, these juveniles disperse from the resting pod, forage as a cohesive unit throughout the night, then reconstitute the resting pod in the morning. As they grow to adulthood, red king crab continue their highly gregarious podding behavior. Although adults spend most of their time in foraging aggregations, adult resting pods 2–3 meters high have been observed and photographed at Kodiak. Photo by Braxton Dew.
